Bill Reviews: “Admission: Impossible”

Directed by Cormac Relf and featuring an ensemble cast, Admission: Impossible was a triumphant return to film for budding director Relf, going so far as to eclipse his latest work, That's Awkward.

The film follows a team of spies set to infiltrate Bruce Hall and disrupt the hall's O-Week. The pacing is excellent, with the plot cutting between several different characters in the infiltration team. I applaud the use of classic Bruce culture gags – including the notorious vending machine theft and a particularly fitting cameo from Ethan Wallace.

Special mention must go to Bryce Robinson for his role as the mission director. Tasked with the obviously unpleasant experience of playing a John's College student, he pulled off the sinister, alcoholic-fueled demeanor with ease.

With a tight script and some solid laughs, I give Admission Impossible 4.5 stars. The film is still screening on Bruce Hall Banter – I encourage all Brucies to watch it.

PUBLIC LECTURE

Impact of the Syrian crisis in Lebanon

Thu 26 Feb, 6-7pm, Law Theatre

Presented by Mr Ahmad El Hariri, Secretary General of the Future Movement

This year will mark four years since the commencement of the Syrian conflict. Lebanon was one of the first countries to open its borders, providing asylum for Syrian families fleeing the conflict. As Lebanon continues to deal with a growing number of Syrian refugees - numbering over one million - tensions between different sects within Lebanon have reached a critical point.

In this lecture, Mr Ahmad El Hariri will outline the growing dilemma Lebanon is facing, and discuss the attempts of the Future Movement to address the imminent threats confronting Lebanon at the demographic, economic, social, political and security levels. This lecture will be an excellent one for IR and MES students alike.
