

The Bruce Billetin

Doing it for Bill since 2014

ISSUE #94: Monday 8th May – Monday 15th May

Some Billetin readers may have noticed that a sheep was missing last week... woops. Consider it added to the missing persons list with the chicken schnitzel and the caramel slice. This week there are guaranteed to be the correct amount (and no half sheep either). Enjoy!

There are 4 sheep in this Billetin

WHAT'S ON IN CANBERRA

DAVID ATTENBOROUGH'S VIRTUAL REALITY EXPERIENCES

National Museum of Australia, 1.8km from CBD
8 Feb - 30 Jun 2017

If Planet Earth 2 blew your mind, you are probably going to swoon when you hear that David Attenborough has created not just one, but two nature documentaries designed for VR. Bookings are essential and tickets are only $20 so they'll go fast, if you snooze you lose.

JULIA MORRIS
Canberra Theatre Centre, 0.3km from CBD
11 May 2017

Julia Morris, famous for her role in House Husbands and a variety of other not very funny/good TV shows (haven't really sold this one to you yet), is coming to Canberra for an actually funny stand up show! It's called Lift and Separate and will attempt to dissect the general madness surrounding her life so it's probably quite relatable for uni students in Week 10.

Performances 7:30pm from 3-6th of May

With the first week of performances complete, Into The Woods is now approaching the stage where everyone who has forgotten to buy a ticket hurriedly tries to secure one. Don't be the person to miss out!

The last show that will ever feature on the stage of the ANU Arts Centre, Into The Woods brings together all your childhood fairy tales with a twist.

Minor disasters such as a light catching on fire, a canister of carbon dioxide leaking, and an actress leaving her microphone on offstage while unleashing some fruity language, are part of a small selection of bonus features which you may be lucky enough to see happen again if you come this week.

Job applications now open – Please send email to applyfor@cockram.com

Everyone loved Bob the Builder as a child, but does the passion for building stop there for most people? The answer is no. Many Australians spend a good proportion of their adolescence and adult lives fiddling around with their tools for pleasure so why not make it a profession? Here at Cockram we have over 4200 employees currently and are looking to expand to 5000 so we can continue to create more buildings like Bruce Hall. With so many jobs up for grabs it's the perfect time to apply, so have a read through the company values below and send in your resume ASAP.

Good sense of humour – There's no such thing as a good work environment without some laughter so at Cockram we're always cracking jokes and playing pranks on each other. Sometimes we like to get the wider community involved in the fun too, so we've recently started mounting TVs on Bruce residents' desks. It's going to be hilarious seeing their faces when they come back to their bedrooms and they realise that they didn't want the TV in the first place and now there's no place left to study. You just got pranked Bruce! Haha.

Gender equality – We've recently been communicating with our employees about the benefits of gender equality in our company. We made it very clear to our workers at Bruce that our company does not tolerate a glass ceiling. Unfortunately, the message may not have had its intended effect as the site manager assured us that he was putting the glass in the windows, not the ceiling. However, just to be on the safe side, he promised not to install ceilings in Bruce at all. He seems pretty pleased with his quick thinking so we'll leave the issue alone for now.

Reliable completion of jobs – Just like Bob the Builder, if you ask us "can you fix it", our response will always be "Yes we can, except it'll take forever and may break again". You may have noticed the quality results of this work ethic throughout Bruce Hall in virtually every door handle to the bathrooms.

Disclaimer: Dear Cockram, The Billetin sincerely apologises for any offence caused. This is intended to be satire and must not be taken seriously, just like your attempts to fix the stairs in the Quad. What are you even doing there? I swear it wasn't broken. Please hurry up and fix it. Do not sue me. Thank you.
